It is not news that we have problems in our country that need to be fixed, but the only thing we do about them is complain and blame the government. If we want the situation to get any better, we should stop blaming everybody but ourselves and try to do a bit on our ends. We can start with simple things as:

Following the most basic rules (ex. traffic rules);

Not paying or taking bribes. Be fair and rational;

Keeping public places clean;

Picking up the waste from the ground, throwing it in the trashcan, and stopping people not doing so;

Help other people. Help an old person cross the road, or help them with carrying their groceries;

Smile and be friendly to everyone, because this could make someone's day better;

Go talk with people. Take part in discussions, debates, and conferences. Share your ideas and thoughts and learn from others. That way you will be able to see any issue from other angles.

And obviously, the simplest way to enact a change is to vote in elections.

Social media is now a prime mover of campaigns. So, whether you post pictures, write blogs or make videos, point out a problem and a possible solution for it and share them with people on Facebook, Twitter, etc.

Education is a crucial factor, which decides the future of the whole world. If the next generation receives a good schooling, they can contribute much more for the society. The future of our country depends on the youth and their education. That is why the teacher must make the lesson more interesting for the student.

If we want a big change in the world, we should start changing ourselves first.
